THE STATE FAIR.

SHOWING WHY THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY SOUGHT A PERMANENT SITE.

Syracuse Proved the Only Point Eligible—What the Society is—The Growth of the Year.

To the Editor:

So many erroneous statements in reference to the State Agricultural society, and the proposed permanent location of the State fairs, are appearing in the press, that it seems necessary to make a true statement of the society's position on several matters of public interest, and the reasons that have induced it to abandon the itinerant system, so that the public may be correctly informed.

It is reported in some quarters that the society intends to get possession of the proceeds of the Ives Pool law for its own benefit, thus taking it away from the county societies, where it now goes. The State society has no such intention or desire.

It is reported that the society has prepared a bill to lay before the Legislature giving it the accumulated money lying in the State treasury from the appropriations for agricultural purposes since 1841, not used from various causes, now amounting to some $30,000. The society has no such intention, and has taken no such action.

It is reported that the society is in some way connected with various propositions for appropriations for "Dairy Instruction," for "Poultry Associations," and for sundry other purposes. The society has no knowledge of and no connection with any of these propositions.

Since its organization, the State society has been the active friend and promoter of the County Agricultural societies, and the present officials of those societies know that it is actively friendly to their interests to-day, and at the annual meeting of the "Association of County Agricultural societies," held in Albany, Feb. 4th and 5th, 1890, they passed a resolution, expressing their confidence in and approval of the management of the State society, and heartily approved of the permanent location of its fairs at Syracuse.

The question of permanent location has been much discussed throughout the State, and it is one upon which there may be honest differences of opinion. In the past history of the society, its annual shows have been held in various parts of the State from New York to Buffalo, and from Watertown and Saratoga to Elmira. This was a wise course when public travel was inconvenient and uncommon. Then there was a novelty about such exhibitions, and the society could rely upon local enthusiasm to furnish the grounds and fit them for its use. Numbers of towns competed each year for the fairs But at length, as fairs of different kinds became common, their novelty was gone. Fewer and fewer places invited the fairs, and finally none at all came forward with propositions and the society was compelled to seek places for its shows. At length only four places in the state were available for the purpose. Albany, Utica, Rochester and Elmira, and of these the society had rights of its own at Elmira only. At all these places the grounds and fittings were inadequate for the proper accommodation of the fairs with the entries increased to over 4,000. The most of them were designed for other purposes, and much of their equipment was useless for State fair purposes. The grounds at Rochester are situated upon a small branch railroad, incompetent to handle expeditiously the State fair exhibits, and, after the last fair there, the management of the road announced that they would not again handle a State fair upon that branch, except through their regular freight stations. The grounds at Utica were sold and were no longer available, while those at Albany were so inadequate that great numbers of temporary structures were required. All these grounds could only be obtained at a heavy rental, beside the great expense of fittings and repairs, and only Albany subscribed funds therefor. Every time the Society came to any of these grounds it found buildings more and more out of repair, and less and less fitted for the increasing shows. But exhibitors were demanding better and better accommodations because of the increased value of their exhibits, and because they found such at other exhibitions. At length it became evident that some permanent, central location, easy of access from all parts of the State, must be secured, or the State fairs would have to be abandoned altogether, for the old system was both outgrown and unsuited to existing conditions.

In the meantime friends of the society had taken the matter in hand. At length citizens of Syracuse subscribed $30,000, with which they purchased 100 acres of suitable, well located land, the perpetual use of which they offered to the society. The society took no immediate action. Year after year it was discussed throughout the State, and at the annual meetings of the society. It became a question in their annual elections of officers. The Executive Board were nearly unanimous in favor of accepting the Syracuse offer, but desired to consider the proposition very fully and carefully. The railroads were consulted. The New York Central railroad and the West Shore run along one side of the grounds, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western along another. The former roads made an agreement, in consideration of permanent location, to bring all exhibits to the grounds and return them again to the points of shipment over all their roads and leased lines free of all charge. The D. L. & W. R. R. stated they would do whatever the Central did. This arrangement completely delocalizes the fairs, as all portions of the State are placed upon a complete equality. These grounds are most favorably located within three miles of the geographical centre of the State, with railroads, besides those named, converging there from every quarter.

In the meantime no proposition either better or worse was received from any other locality, and finally further delay seemed unnecessary, and in February, 1889, the proposition from citizens in Syracuse was formally accepted, over two years after the time it was made. The Society has since purchased 184 acres of very desirable land adjoining the 100 acres already described. All this action was approved and confirmed by the Society at its last annual meeting. The further discussion of the subject now seems to be useless, and can only be harmful.

Some may ask, What is the State Agricultural society? It is a State institution, chartered in 1832 and re-organized in 1841, for the promotion of agriculture and the household arts. It reports to the State and receives aid from it. Any citizen is eligible to membership and to active participation in its management. When there are profits from its shows they can only be used for State purposes in the advancement of agriculture. No profits can be paid to individuals as dividends are paid to stockholders in many other corporations holding exhibitions. None of its officers receive any compensation for their services, except its corresponding secretary and its treasurer, who are compelled to give much time to their duties. The Legislature regards it as a State institution, directing it to perform services in which it has no direct interest, as the distribution of the Pool Tax, the holding of Farmers' Institutes, etc.

Its fairs have been the instruments for introducing many of the great improvements in agriculture to the State and the world. The inventor of the iron plow was one of its original founders, and many of the leading inventors of mowing and reaping machines and of much improved agricultural machinery have been among its active members. Many of the improved breeds of horses, cattle and sheep have been introduced into this country by its officers in times past, and to-day, some of the leading importers and breeders are among its active officers.

The State Agricultural society proposes to ask the State of New York to accept the title to its lands, and to improve them for exhibition purposes, and then to lease them to the society so long as it shall comply with its charter, keep itself clean (which it has always heretofore done), and promote the objects of its incorporation. It has no means of its own for doing this work, and has no way of obtaining them. We believe that the State will acknowledge its indebtedness to the society, and gladly accede to its wishes. Several States have spent large sums upon their State fair grounds, and the Empire State cannot afford to do less than they.

JAMES WOOD,
President.

Mt. Kisco, N. Y., Feb. 10th, 1890.

THE STATE SENATE.

What was Done by that Body this Morning

ALBANY, Feb. 14.—At the assembling of the Senate to-day, Mr. Saxton moved that the further consideration of the ballot reform bill be made the special order for Wednesday next. He said that a number of senators were absent to-day, and he did not think that a desultory discussion would advance the bill. As town meetings were to be held next week, and some of the senators would be absent, he thought Wednesday would be the earliest day the bill could be reached, and on that day he would move a call of the House. The general registry and corrupt practice bill will be considered then also.

A Wedding Party Drowned.

Uncle Rufus Hatch, who lives in New York and who is trying to have a World's Fair held in Chicago, is referred to in the Chicago Herald as "the New York millionaire." Why, Uncle Rufus ceased to be a millionaire long ago. He is only quoted here as worth $50,000, but that is more than sufficient basis for a millionaire from the Chicago standpoint.
