Nurses Stop for No Barrier in Waging Unrelenting Warfare Against Disease

THE RED CROSS NURSE TYPICALS THE HUMANITARIAN WORK OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS THROUGHOUT THE NATION.

UN the matter of battered communities struggling to emerge from disaster; in the back reaches of isolated settlements among people denied the simplest facilities for ordered existence; in the rural settlements, as in the great cities, the Red Cross nurse is ever in service. It is not strange, therefore, that probably 75 per cent of Americans, when they think of Red Cross, visualize the great humanitarian organization in the figure of the Red Cross nurse.

For forty years she has gone about her self-sacrificing tasks without thought of material reward—doing all for others, in war and in peace. She is always on active duty in the battle against disease and to establish preventive measures whose goal is the making of a healthy, stalwart citizenship in thousands of communities the Red Cross nurse is striving for public enlightenment in health, is taking into schools and homes the lessons of hygiene and the simple though effective means of caring for the sick, while under the government she is an duty with the Army, Navy, U. S. Veterans Bureau and the U. S. Public Health Service.

The Red Cross roll carries the names of 40,529 nurses, 806 having enrolled during the last year. The work of the Red Cross nurse is in intimate contact with the people as individuals, yet that work is rarely spectacular although it forms the vivid background of health advancement. In the United States she has carried the gospel of health to the far corners and has given tremendous impetus to health education especially in the rural areas. In more than 2,000 counties the Red Cross nurse has been engaged to establish public health nursing services, a work which has required more than 4,000 nurses and resulted in the permanent foundation of such nursing services and the absorption of them by municipal and county authorities in hundreds of places, 75 of those services being taken over by the taxpayers during the last year.

The policy of the American Red Cross is opposed to duplication of services rendered by any other organization, but it has found in the rural field that cultivation along public health lines is still very meagre. An adequate service of one public health nurse for every 2,000 population indicates the vast extent of this field throughout the entire country. This is a development work set of a year or two years, but of a decade through the combined effort of both official and voluntary agencies having an interest in health.

For the long haul up the grade to a nation-wide and permanently supported service for the public health the Red Cross has set a high standard for urban and rural nursing. The "hauling power" of more than 2,500 Red Cross Chapters is being exerted everywhere with greater spirit in the realization that the Red Cross nurse has a usefulness and an influence in this work now well understood, and that ahead the years of creative industry of incalculable value to the community.

Through teaching in the schools, in classes of mothers, by practical demonstrations, talks and home visiting, and the introduction of hot lunches for school children the Red Cross nurse, as nutrition instructor opens new fields for the organized Chapter forces to promote this important program. The nurse instructor spreads understanding of the fundamentals of nutrition as well as of the dietary values of food materials. In the past year 125,509 children and 13,200 adults were taught nutrition by the Red Cross, 25,600 homes were visited, and in 1,160 schools hot lunches were adopted as a stimulus to physical and mental fitness. Educators Warmly Praise the Work

In inviting the people to join the American Red Cross during the enrollment period from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 11, 27, or to renew their memberships, the Red Cross places before the country this nursing service as but one of its unceasing endeavors in behalf of humanity. The healthiest individual, as well as every individual who knows from experience the gradations down from a perfect health equipment, is urged to support by his allegiance the American Red Cross as a simple duty to himself and his fellow man.

The large and many beautiful floral tributes necessitated an extra car for conveyance to the grave. There also were many mass cards.
