THE CLEAR VISION. I did not dream I never knew What charms our sternest seasons were. Was never yet the sky so blue? Was never earth so white before? Till now I never saw the glow Of sunset on your hills of snow And never learned the bough's designs Of beauty in its leafless lines.

PLAYS THAT PLEASE. Good and Bad Points of Long Runs From the Actors' Standpoint. Long runs, like most things, have their good as well as their bad points. Good, because constant repetition so identifies one with the characters-impersonated that it becomes second nature to feel and act it.

On the other hand, the evil effects of long runs are indisputable. Prominent among them is a general mental weariness which often causes one to forget the most familiar lines and to turn blankly to the prompter's box or to some friendly actor for the words. This happened to me several times, notably in "The Winter's Tale" in London, where, after playing 11-100 nights, I had to be prompted in several of Hermione's great speeches.

Many other examples might be cited to show how weary the brain grows after acting the same part six or seven times weekly for 100 or 200 consecutive nights, with only the rest of Sunday to distract the mind.—Mary Anderson's Memoirs.

And what's White doing? "He's the agent for a famous gun-maker and is doing well. He sells all kinds of guns, pistols and bicycles." "And Johnson?" "Oh, yes. He got interested in a sewing machine manufactory, and a little later they took up bicycles and are doing a flourishing business. I understand they have a capacity of over 100 wheels a day."

"Is Wilson still in the livery business?" he asked with some hesitation. "Certainly, but he devotes most of his time to the little-bicycle repair shop in the rear of his stable." "Ah, there goes old Bones, the auction. The old fellow is—" "Oh, he's agent for an automatic pump for inflating tires." "Is there any one who isn't in the bicycle business?" asked the returned traveler sadly. "I don't think of any one just now," replied the native.—Chicago Post.
