

Johnson Guilty Jurors Declare After Long Debate

Auburn Youth Convicted In Harmon Hold-up Case, Will Be Sentenced Thursday — Vrooman Freed For His Tips To Officials on Recent Jail Break

After deliberating for about 12 hours, the jury which listened to evidence at the trial of Carroll Johnson, Auburn Negro youth charged with robbery in the first degree, the hold-up at the Harmon grocery store in Osborne Street last December, brought in a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. The jurors received the case from Judge Kenneth Underwood shortly after 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon and returned in the verdict at 1:38 o'clock this morning. A fair sized crowd of spectators was on hand during the night hours and up to the time that the verdict was announced. There was no demonstration of any kind.

Eldrich J. Willis, defendant's attorney, asked for a poll of the jurors and reserved his right to make any motions in connection with the verdict by Thursday morning.

County Judge Underwood deferred the passing of sentence until 10 o'clock Thursday morning, March 2, and Johnson was escorted back to the County Jail.

This morning, Richard Vrooman, of Auburn, indicted by the January Grand Jury, was arraigned on an indictment found by the January Grand Jury charging him with endangering the morals of a child.

District Attorney Theodore M. Coburn withdrew the indictment found by the Grand Jury charging Vrooman with seduction, claiming that some newly discovered facts since the Grand Jury sitting warranted such action.

Vrooman pleaded guilty to the bill charging him with endangering the morals of a child. He gave his age as 21 and said he is a radio repair man by occupation. As to his ability to repair the radio, Vrooman pointed out that he got the old set in the County Jail going in one shape.

District Attorney Coburn urged the imposition of a suspended sentence for Vrooman, without any probation proviso. The prosecutor explained that while in jail Vrooman explained a recent getaway on the part of a young prisoner, told just where the escapee planned to go on the outside. The escapee was quickly caught.

As a result of information given by Vrooman the youth was nabbed riding blind baggage on a New York Central train in the Auburn yards. For this service to the officials, Mr. Coburn contended, there should be some consideration shown Vrooman and he recommended a suspended sentence.

Judge Underwood suspended sentence with an admonition that if Vrooman gets into trouble again he will be brought in and given a stiff sentence.

Disposition of the Vrooman case brought the February term of County Court to an end.

Haigh of 265 Dale Street, Syracuse, retired official of the Central New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church Monday afternoon at the rooms of Fairchild & Meach in Syracuse.

Ministers attending the rites then circled the casket and sang the hymn, "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," directed by Rev. Walter Tilson. Committal services were read by Mr. Benton before the body was taken to Rochester for cremation.

MAJOR WARNER WILL PLAY WELL LIKED CONCERTO

Will Rehearse With Orchestral Society Thursday Night, Be Heard in Concert Friday Night

A special rehearsal of the Auburn Orchestral Society has been called for Thursday evening at Emerson Auditorium by Conductor Harold M. Henderson. Final preparations will be made for the concert to be held on Friday evening at 8:15.

Mr. John A. Warner, guest soloist, will be present at the rehearsal. Mr. Warner will play the first movement of the Schumann Concerto in A Minor, one of the most outstanding of all piano concertos. It was written in 1841 and consisted at that time of the first movement only and was called the "Phantasie in A Minor." In 1845 Schumann added two more movements and Clara Schumann played the complete work from manuscript at a concert in Dresden the same year.

At this performance the critics pronounced it ultra-modern and were not very kind to it. It was called "labored and utterly extravagant." The critics patronized the "praiseworthy efforts of Madame Schumann to make her husband's curious rhapsody basis for music." It is now one of the most beloved of all piano concertos.

Orchestral numbers will consist of a melodious overture by Schubert, a selection by Victor Herbert, ballet music and a second movement of a Tchaikowsky symphony. The second movement of the Tchaikowsky symphony uses the oboe as the solo instrument and its plaintive tones carry the melody all through the movement. Russell Roney of this city is oblat with the orchestra.

Of special interest is the ballet music from "Faust," Gounod, who wrote the opera, usually receives credit for having written the ballet music. It was written in 1858 by Debussy and put into the opera when Gounod made over "Faust" into grand opera.

The orchestra, made up of Auburn musicians, has been rehearsing diligently for weeks and a finished performance is expected Friday night. Music lovers still remember the excellent program played by the orchestra a few months ago, when it presented its first program of the season.

Many season tickets have been sold for the course of three concerts, but tickets for the concert Friday night will be available at the door for a small price.

A substitute had to be found for Mayor Charles D. Osborne in the cello section, and while the concert is going on Osborne, an enthusiastic member of the orchestra, will be a patient in City Hospital as a result of a broken hip suffered in a fall a few weeks ago.

FORMER CATCHER NOW CATCHING ON IN CONGRESS

By EDDY GILMORE
Washington, Feb. 28.—(AP)—Rookie Representative Phil L. Schwert (D.-N.Y.) admitted today he is catching on to the ways of Congress. He should, for he used to catch for the New York Yankees.

"The coaching," he observed, "is better in Congress, and furthermore, they're nicer to those who are just breaking in."

Schwert went to the Yankees from the University of Pennsylvania campus in 1914. He was third-string catcher that season and "it was in spring training 1916 when Colonel Knickerbocker bought the club," he explained, "that I made a decision which took me to Congress."

Young Schwert realized one balmy morning that baseball is a young man's game and that he was getting too young.

Frank Tinney was managing the Yankees, and Ed Sweeney and Leslie Nunamaker were doing the catching. Schwert asked to be traded where he could play regularly before retiring.

At Newark he did plenty of playing. The team was crippled the whole season, and Schwert performed at every position except pitching.

The next year he bought a general store in upstate New York and played baseball on the side. He thinks that year was the toughest of his life.

Came the World War, and Schwert enlisted in the navy. His service was uneventful. In 1914, when he thought he'd given up professional baseball forever, Buffalo's three catchers were injured and he was asked to play. Next season Buffalo persuaded him to play in their home games.

"Then," he said, "I really gave up baseball for good, except—"

Except what, Mr. Congressman?

"Well," he said, "I've been looking things over here in Washington, and I think we've got the makings of a grand team to boom this year. Walk and get at 'em, boys!"

Many Have Roles in Narrative Drama at Second Presbyterian

The front of the church auditorium is being transformed on three different levels to be used for the presentation of the elaborate Narrative Drama "At the Well of Bethlehem" at the Second Presbyterian Church next Sunday, March 5, at a service which will begin at 7:30.

The drama opens with a narrative by three women with their water pots who relate events leading to the familiar Bible story of Ruth and Naomi. Then there follows the scene in which Ruth is represented as insisting upon returning with her mother-in-law to her own country. The story of the romance of Ruth and Boaz is then told. The next scene narrated by the women at the well is that of David, the shepherd and Samuel the prophet who has been sent to anoint the new King of Israel. One by one, Jesse's sons are brought to Samuel but it is not until the youngest, David, appears that Samuel knows that he has found the new king. Several striking scenes follow.

A large number of people are taking part in this narrative drama under the direction of Mrs. Donald H. MacKenzie. Prof. Walter K. Long of the Museum is assisting in directing the staging effects and costumes.
